5. EEA Report Showcases Grim Macroeconomic Diagnosis

The Reporter: May 24, 2025

A long-awaited report from the Ethiopian Economics Association (EEA) paints a stark picture of the country's macroeconomic health, exposing deepening fiscal strains, declining productivity, and worsening living standards over the past two decades.

The findings, covering 2001–2023, highlight systemic challenges that threaten Ethiopia's economic stability despite periods of rapid growth earlier in the century.

The report reveals alarming trends in public debt, which skyrocketed after 2015, reaching USD 62.5 billion in 2023—equivalent to USD 575.60 per citizen. This surge has placed Ethiopia in "high debt stress", with export earnings and revenue failing to keep pace with obligations.

By 2022, the country's debt performance had fallen below the Sub-Saharan African average, signaling urgent need for reform.

While public revenue grew by over 200 percent during the reporting period, inflation and shrinking purchasing power meant budget allocations saw only modest real increases.

6. Insurance in Africa Must Evolve to Become Pillar of Economic Growth, DPM Temasgen Says

ENA: May 26, 2025

Insurance in Africa must evolve beyond its current peripheral role to become a central pillar of the continent's economic development, Ethiopia's Deputy Prime Minister Temesgen Tiruneh remarked.

The three-day conference brings together key stakeholders, industry leaders, and policymakers from across the continent to engage in high-level discussions on the future of insurance in Africa.

Addressing delegates, Ethiopia's Deputy Prime Minister underscored the impact of rising global debt and fiscal constraints on the insurance industry.

"For insurers, this is not just background noise. It shapes everything — from the investment climate to asset safety, consumer demand to economic stability."

Temesgen urged participants to use the conference as a moment to reflect, collaborate, and chart a shared path forward.

7. China says its committed to expanding its investments in Africa

Africa News; May 21/2025

China is committed to expanding its investment in Africa by further promoting corporate cooperation in various fields.
That is according to a Ministry of Commerce official who was briefing the media in Beijing on Wednesday on its current state of investment on the continent.
"African countries have seen steady economic development in recent years, with the overall business environment continuing to improve and the willingness of Chinese firms to invest in the continent significantly growing," said Shen Xiang, director of the West Asia and Africa Department in the ministry.
"Our data reveals that over the past five years, annual average direct investments from Chinese companies in Africa have consistently exceeded $3 billion, with investment projects spanning a wide range of sectors," he said.
China focus has been primarily on the infrastructure, construction, and manufacturing sectors, but he said the "entities involved in China's investments in Africa have become increasingly varied".
Shen noted that the ministry will further enhance the investment by fostering cooperation, especially among small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs).

8. Fueling digital transformation for economic progress

Ethiopian Press: May 22, 2025

It is well comprehended that Ethiopia is actively pursuing digital transformation through its "Digital Ethiopia 2025" strategy, aiming at integrating technology across various sectors to drive economic growth and citizen engagement and social progress. This comprehensive approach focuses on infrastructure development, digital literacy and e-governance.
Speaking at the official inauguration of the Ethiopian Technology Expo – ETEX 2025 under the theme, 'Shaping Ethiopia's Digital Future,' at Addis International Convention Center, President of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia President Taye Atske Selassie said that Ethiopia is determined to play a meaningful role in Africa's technological progress, given its strategic location, young workforce and growing digital infrastructure. He further said that Ethiopia has embarked on technology, peculiarly the digital one, to meet its vision for a digitally empowered future and posterity in the years to come.
According to the President, Ethiopia has made notable strides in digital transformation and workforce development and the very key aspect of Ethiopia's digital transformation, which comes at the forefront, is infrastructure development on which the government is investing in with a view to improving connectivity, power, and e-governance infrastructure to support digital transformation and other related aspects.
He said, "Ethiopia is actively seeking partnerships with international organizations and private companies to support its digital transformation efforts
The Ethiopian government is collaborating with known international organizations around the sector to expand telecommunications infrastructure and internet access.
